Title: Tertiary forestry education beyond 2020: the case for Malaysia

Authors: Faridah-Hanum I.
Salleh M. N.

Issue Date: 2018

Citation: Journal Of Tropical Forest Science, 30, p. 439-445

Abstract: The development of human capital at the professional level beyond 2020 is needed to meet the expansion of the forestry sector in Malaysia. It takes care not only of biodiversity and the forest but also the good economic returns for the country. Professional foresters also manage the services provided by forest ecosystems for the daily sustenance of Malaysia's population of about 32 million. The importance of forestry education in the country in relation to the nation's needs and what is expected of professional foresters beyond 2020 are herein discussed.

International Journal of Business and Society, 19 (S1) pp 66-78. ISSN 1511-6670'. Below the citation, there is an 'Abstract' section with the following text: 'The purpose of this study was to access local communities' perception on 'kelulut' bee as an agro tourism product. This paper presents the findings of factors affecting local communities' perception on 'kelulut' bee as an agro tourism product in Kampung Sungai Buah, Dengkil, Selangor. Attributes from past studies on impacts of agro tourism to local communities and their attitudes towards agro tourism in general were combined with the research on 'kelulut' or stingless bee honey industry. Factor analysis was used as tool in the reduction method. As the result, 41 attributes were identified to have significant contributions to this study and all these attributes were extracted into 13 different groups. Multiple regression analysis was employed to determine which factors were significant to depict local communities' perception on 'kelulut' bee as an agro tourism product and through findings, there were 6 factors found. This study can be used in evaluating local communities' perception on other new, potentially booming agro tourism products. The findings from this study would also be beneficial to conduct further studies in this area.' Below the abstract, there is a 'Download File' section with a button labeled 'Download (45KB)' and a link to the 'Official URL: http://www.ijbs.unimas.my/index.php/content-abstracts'.
